Not babysitters • Freeh's future • Bucking bronco • Golden rule ...

By PAUL BEDARD

Bush wears on Secret Service

● With Bill Clinton's overextended travels and late-night partying finally done with, you might think the Secret Service would be happy campers. But nooo. Seems they're working just as hard but with less money, and agents (who cost $240,000 to train) are quitting after just a few years. "Our people are tired and that's not good," says Director Brian Stafford. "In the business we're in you cannot be tired." What's wrong with this picture? First, President Bush not only didn't pony up the needed $45 million to hire enough agents and buy the technology to handle the job but he shorted the service $19 million needed to police the 2002 Olympics. Result: Agents will still work 85 to 90 hours of overtime a month. They'll get paid, but the fatigue factor will be a bear. And that's not all. While Bush and his wife, Laura, are homebodies, the prez and his veep have an extended family, resulting in 20 "protectees" needing 24/7 protection. That's the largest number ever. Then there's a new ex-president and ex-first lady. The complaint of departing agents: "What they tell us," says Stafford, "is that they don't have a life."

Circling Hollywood, D.C. style

It's a classic inside-the-beltway story. A Navy captain turned White House flak pens a thriller. A friendly reporter gives the book to a former White House official now in showbiz. Mr. Big finds a bright-lights actor who likes it because the sailing scenes are cool. That's the story of Circle William, written by Bill Harlow, currently the CIA spokesman. An acquaintance at the Washington Post was so wowed by it he told pal Jerry Rafshoon, an ex-Carter aide who is now making films. And Rafshoon sold it to actor-sailor Morgan Freeman and Lori McCreary, cofounders of Revelations Entertainment. They're teaming up with Paramount to make a movie—maybe costarring Denzel Washington. Rafshoon's team already includes Godfather producer Al Ruddy, plus the screenwriter for Patriot Games. Look for Washington cameos of prominent pols and pressies in the tale of a White House spokesman and destroyer captain spoiling a Libyan bombing plot. Rafshoon predicts success and heralds the author's CIA ties as a positive: "That shows authenticity."

Mopping up

● Seems the Clintons were busy cleaning up after themselves just before leaving the White House. Administration officials tell Congress that the first family spent $150,000 replacing soiled and worn linens and $100,000 touching up the residence.

Duck, he's dialing

● Don't be surprised if you hear cops yelling, "Get down, he's got a cellphone!" Capitol

Police now demand that all portable phones be X-rayed before entering the House or Senate. They tell us that a new gun has been designed that looks like a cellphone and shoots out the antenna hole.

Florida tease

● Controversial Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris has taken a page out of Bill Clinton's playbook. While telling folks back home of her plans to stay in office, she is mapping out a congressional bid. She told us about running in Florida's Gulf Coast 13th or 14th congressional district, both of which are opening up in 2002 because of retirements.

Camp Bill

● Hot Springs is counting on Bill Clinton to fire up the town. Plans have been shown to city leaders for the Clinton policy retreat on a nearby lake. It's being touted as an Arkansas Camp David—cabins included. The ex-prez plans to host dispute-settlement negotiations. The city hopes it will bring a bit of international attention.

Fannie scam

● There's a report being prepared for Congress that says mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac receive at least $10 billion in federal subsidies but don't pass that on to taxpayers in the form of lower mortgage rates. The Congressional Budget Office is keeping it under wraps. Reason: "Politically, no one seems up to the task of taking Fannie and Freddie on," claims Peter Davis of Davis Capital Investment Ideas. Davis says the CBO's fear of riling Fannie's and Freddie's friends in Congress may also explain why it won't present its findings, as it had planned, at a Federal Reserve-sponsored conference on banking this week.

Students of terror

● Washington's a nice place to visit, but do Israelis really need to come here to learn about terrorism? Later this month, the State Department will host 15 top Israeli officials for a "Senior Crisis Management Seminar" on fighting terrorists. "It's like teaching the Eskimos about snow," says an antiterror pro.

Not babysitters

● The question buzzing through Washington: How did Austin booze cops get through the Secret Service to bust first daughter Jenna Bush on an underage drinking rap? Former agents explain that presidential kids get lots of space, especially on social outings. Agents check for bad guys and then get out of the way. And unlike Sinbad's role in First Kid, they never give advice to kids. Another factor: The cops were undercover.

Freeh's future

● The Clinton White House can chill. Louis Freeh, exiting FBI director and Clinton nemesis, says he won't write a tell-all book. He could write lots, with the Lewinsky affair and other scandals occurring on his watch. Instead, he plans to lie low for now, spending time with his ailing father and tossing the ball with his six boys. As for work, there's a line of headhunters at his door.

Bucking bronco

● So much for repeat heart-attack victim Vice President Dick Cheney's following his wife's strict diet plan. At the White House Correspondents' Association Dinner last month, Lynne Cheney had a waiter replace his steak part of the surf-and-turf meal with more salmon. But when the boss got it, he took her plate instead, wolfing down the meat and fish. He did, however, skip the cheesecake.

Golden rule

● Write a personal letter to first lady Laura Bush and something amazing happens: You get a personal letter back. That's what happened to Denise Higgins, second-grade teacher at Banneker Elementary in Middleburg, Va. She wrote about her class reading program, and Bush responded swiftly. "Reading will give you lasting pleasure," she wrote the class. Aides say she has already signed over 6,000 similar letters, all personalized in some fashion to respond to the letter-writers. "If you take the time to write a thoughtful letter to Mrs. Bush, she'll write a personal letter to you," says an aide. Bush picks her shots, though. Rant on policy, and your letter will go to the appropriate agency. But address her issues—reading, education—and voilà!

IN QUOTES

"My father said I was perfectly suited for Washington because I've always worked around nuts."

Leon Panetta, former congressman and Clinton aide, who worked in his family walnut orchard as a child

"He lost the election but stole the presidency."

Cuban announcer on President Bush during the May Day parade in Havana

"He said, 'Don't underestimate President Bush; he's a formidable force.'"

Llewellyn Wells, West Wing producer, quoting President Clinton

"We're close enough to be sisters, and I agree that she's a white woman with a black woman trying to come out."
