“Serve a Purpose Larger than Yourself”

Americans have a wonderful history of volunteering. President and Mrs. Bush believe that all of us have a responsibility to give back - the President often said, “To whom much is given, much is required.” This is your opportunity to be involved with the George W. Bush Presidential Library and Museum! We offer a wide range of fun and interesting volunteer opportunities for United States citizens, sixteen years of age or older. In our exhibits and programs, we often talk about the importance of principle based leadership. Three principles that are very important to President Bush and that particularly relate to our volunteer corps are:

To whom much is given much is required
Working with our team at the Bush Library and Museum will give you many opportunities to help advance our important mission of preserving and making available our nation’s history, while educating about how our government works and our roles as citizens.

Free people will set the course of history
As U.S. citizens, we have inalienable rights and freedoms that allow us to make our own history. Volunteering creates a positive legacy that will last longer than a lifetime. What history will you make?

Every child, and every person can learn
Education empowers society to do and achieve more. The George W. Bush Presidential Library and Museum provides educational outreach opportunities for children to learn more about their country and government so they may become engaged citizenry. Civic literacy leads to civic engagement. Volunteers and docents are central to our educational efforts.
